

CAS Experience Program Internship Graduation

After a year of hard work, including a public workshop at the Science Museum and presenting at the annual Clean Air Student Conference, our interns have completed our CAS Experience Program (Creativity, Activity, Service).

Together with students of The Hong Kong Polytechnic University School of Nursing, they capped off the year by creating the "Clean Air Zine", a showcase of their learning throughout this academic year, visually laying out the knowledge they have learned in a simple and beautiful way.

Indoor Air Quality Project Launch

Our vision of "Clean Air For All" in Hong Kong includes all people in all places and Indoor Air Quality is an important but under-appreciated aspect of air quality. Hong Kong is an urban area where a majority of the population spends most of their time indoors at work, school, transit and leisure.

The two year program [Clean Air Indoors for Hong Kong] starting 1 May is an effort to raise awareness of IAQ issues among not just the general public, but private sector businesses, social welfare sector, education sector and healthcare sector to manage IAQ in their spaces for the benefit of all users of their spaces.

In this program, CAN will conduct a Study Program and Key Sector Engagement Program, using insights from both to enhance dialogue with policymakers and influencers and hope to eventually drive change by the government and develop a comprehensive IAQ management policy roadmap.

The 6th Clean Air Conference 2025

Organized by the Clean Air Student Council on 12 May, the keynote speech was delivered by Dr Fanny Ko, with other speakers including Dr Tony Ip, Erica Chan, Patrick Fung, and speeches and presentations from our interns. Professor Ko reminds us of how air pollution disproportionately affects vulnerable populations and is a large scale social problem. We are reminded of how allowing vulnerable groups to also live up to their potential is key to building a more inclusive society. As Hong Kong heads towards its decarbonisation goal in 2050 collaboration across sectors including experts, business, professionals and policymakers becomes even more important. We should continue to invest in public education so society at large and all ages can understand and support environmentalism and we hope to see a new generation of Hong Kong entrepreneurs who work on solving social issues.

How do Typhoons Affect Our Weather and Air Quality?

Typhoon season is coming. Did you know how this affects our city's air? Before a typhoon, the weather is often calm and stable, this is caused by subsidence, sinking air around a typhoon.

Rising air from the centre of a typhoon system cools and becomes denser, then sinks on the outskirts of the typhoon. This creates an area of weather with fewer winds and clouds.

Without winds to blow away air pollutants, air quality is often worse just before a typhoon because changing winds might also blow pollutants from northward down to us.
